HOW TO EARN
MONEY AT HOME

BY SARA SPENCE

I want to tell you what a good time I am having evenings. I am a stenographer during the day; but evenings I am at a switchboard in a hotel. You told me how to get the job and I certainly thank you for many happy hours.

You have the right idea. A change of work is play with us all. I wish you would become so proficient in your evening work that, in time, it would absorb you completely. It is a delightful pastime, tending a switchboard in a high-class place.

I am employed all day, but I would like to earn a few dollars evenings, directing envelopes.

I think you are making a poor choice of evening work, because envelopes require very close attention. Immense packages are carried back and forth and your work must be neat and accurate. However, if you still want such work, the mimeographing, multigraphing and personal campaign concerns have plenty of it.

We are in serious financial straits and I know I could sell dresses at home if I knew where to buy them.

Go to the wholesale dress houses. Make your selections slowly and only a few at a time until you learn the business. Give good financial references and you will have no trouble getting dresses "on time."

Thank you for putting me on the right track for learning invisible mending. My work was so good that they gave me something to do at once.

Still I do advise you to take a course at one of the training places. They will give you the address—as I am not allowed to do so—at the invisible mending concern. I know a girl who studied a year and a half before she became an absolute expert.

How can I sell aprons with dust caps to match? I can make them, but I don't know how to sell them.

If they are absolutely perfect and very artistic, the woman's exchanges will handle them and sell them on a commission basis. Otherwise, you can write to people, take your aprons and caps wherever you go, and gradually work up a trade. The art shops will handle them—the little specialty shops. Don't be afraid to ask them. That is positively the only way.

Mrs. Spence will answer questions on "How to Make Money at Home." Tell her your situation, and she will gladly take up your special case and advise you. There is no charge; and your name will not appear. Address, Mrs. Sara Spence, The Evening Graphic, 25 City Hall Place.
